

THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The House of Representatives

(See Article I, Section 2)

The largest house of Congress is the House of Representatives. There are 435 representatives in the House. The number of representatives a state has is based on the number of people, or population, in the state. There is one representative for every 500,000 people. So if a state has two million people, that state would be able to send four representatives to Washington, D.C.

The term of office for a representative is two years. In order to stay in office, he or she must be reelected every two years.

To find out how many people are in a state, the government conducts a census, or count of the people, every ten years. The first census was conducted in 1790. When will the next census occur?

In order to be a representative, there are certain requirements to be met. A representative must be at least 25 years old, must be a citizen of the United States for at least seven years, and must live in the state from which he or she is elected.

Within the House, there are several leaders. The speaker of the House is the presiding officer. The speaker is selected by the members of the House and is usually a member of the majority party. The speaker of the House is second in line to take over the presidency, after the vice president, in the event of an emergency.

The House of Representatives has the sole power to begin impeachment proceedings against a government official. To impeach is to accuse an official of some wrongdoing or misuse of power. The House begins the process by accusing the official, but the trial is carried out by the Senate. More about impeachment will be discussed in later chapters.

The speaker's podium in the House of Representatives' chamber.