Lesson 11  Review Exercise

1. The Anasazi were farmers. Their activities, such as pottery, weaving, and basket making, were those associated with a ________________ people.

2. The Hopi village of Oraibi is now easily accessible by car. In the old days, the only way to the village was along ________________ paths leading uphill.

3. The Hopi believe that spirits inhabit the natural world. Each generation has kept alive the ________________ traditions that honor these spirits.

4. Ceremonies are held to honor the spirits during their earthly visit. The dancers are clad in ________________ costumes and masks.

5. The masks of the demons are intended to frighten children. They ________________ the evil spirits who punish disobedience.

6. The children get caught up in the excitement of the dancing. They seek out the dancers who ________________ the friendly, gift-bearing spirits.

7. It's easy to tell the "good guys" from the "bad guys" among the dancers. The ones in ________________ looking masks represent evildoers.

8. These demon spirits are supposed to look scary. The children know that their ________________ is only make-believe.
9. Kachina dolls range in size from a few inches to two feet. The carvings are __________________ in wood from the root of the cottonwood tree.

10. The finished carvings are painted in bright colors. Some carvers ___________________ their work with various kinds of ornaments.

11. Not all kachina doll makers work full time. Some carvers do the work to ___________________ their earnings from farming.

12. The finely made dolls are works of art. They have a ___________________ purpose, namely to teach Hopi children something of their history and traditions.

13. Small, simply made kachina dolls can be bought quite cheaply. The work of the more ___________________ carvers sells for thousands of dollars.

14. The more expensive kachina dolls are not intended for the casual tourist trade. They are sought after by ___________________ of Hopi art.

15. Expensive kachina dolls and cheaper imitations may look similar to the casual viewer. Those who have studied them find it easy to ___________________ the difference.